The Society for the Study of American Women Writers was established to promote the study of American women writers through research, teaching, and publication. It is the goal of the Society to strengthen relations among persons and institutions in this country and internationally who are devoted to such studies, and to broaden knowledge among the general public about American women writers. The Society is committed to diversity in the study of American women writers -- racial, ethnic, gender, class, sexual orientation, region, and era -- as well as of scholars participating in the Society.

This year’s gathering boasts several special features:

A “Creative Conversations” strand focused on teaching American Women Writers;

A series of sessions on Friday to highlight today’s American women creative writers, beginning with two roundtables of authors from the region and culminating in a keynote address by Dorothy Allison, author of Bastard Out of Carolina, Trash, Cavedweller, and Two or Three Things I Know for Sure;

Celebratory receptions Thursday and Saturday evenings, with the first of these including the announcement of winners for SSAWW’s new awards;

A “mentoring breakfast” on Friday morning, when an opening roundtable addressing several key themes associated with successful-career building will be followed by smaller discussion groups at “theme” tables, with topics ranging from questions graduate students have raised to later-career concerns;

An afternoon tea on Friday, co-sponsored by several of our affiliated author societies;

A “networking luncheon” on Saturday with multiple opportunities to meet and interact with colleagues from within your region and around the country;

Exciting opportunities here in Denver, as highlighted by our Local Arrangements Committee below, including “Postscript: Writing After Conceptual Art” at the Museum of Contemporary Art (MCA);

A rich and diverse collection of conference sessions using several different formats, with a number of these linked to our conference theme, “Citizenship and Belonging.”

Why “Citizenship and Belonging”?
Historically speaking, these have been concerns of American women authors from their earliest writings, published and unpublished, and they remain concerns today. Long before the 1848 Declarations of Sentiments, women writers raised questions about how they could participate in the leadership of new American communities; similarly, contemporary women respond to the day’s political events and social trends in many forms of the written word. Just as women of all backgrounds considered the parameters of “Americanness”—its inherence or its acquisition, its stability or fluidity, its necessity or its superfluity—their contemporary counterparts are using both old-fashioned forms and cutting-edge technologies to reimagine the United States and its people for the 21st century. Whether one thinks of Harriet Jacobs pondering her own “sale” in 19th-century New York, Jhumpa Lahiri imagining connections across seas and generations in her short fiction, or young writers seizing the potential of the internet and social media to create their own publishing worlds, women writers have always, and perhaps always will, wrestle with what it means to belong.

Citizenship—how to claim it, how best to exercise it, and where its boundaries lie—is at the heart of much women’s writing. Citizenship can be constructed in many ways, both legally and culturally, and can be explored in terms of race, class, ethnicity, family sexuality, economics, religion, place, and region—in short, from multiple perspectives and through multiple lenses. It can also be investigated as a question of form and genre: what kinds of writing “belong,” and to what realms or entities do they claim entry?
Our fall 2012 conference offers an array of opportunities for examining these interrelated themes of “Citizenship and Belonging,” even as we continue to honor the many other topics that have made our field so dynamic. Besides the many theme-inflected session proposals we gratefully received, we’ve also organized several invited sessions, specifically intended to “punctuate” the conference experience this year through ties to our theme. As you scan your program and plan your personal schedule, we’re confident you’ll find many opportunities to consider these productive terms of “Citizenship and Belonging” as they relate to our work together as academics and as citizens seeking to belong ourselves.

Welcome from the Local Arrangements Committee
The theme of this year’s SSAWW conference is Citizenship and Belonging, and to that end, we want to welcome you to the mile-high city. We hope your time here will be productive, engaging, and fun. The conference program promises a wonderful array of speakers, sessions, and events that will inspire, challenge, and affirm your ideas about American women writers. We wish you lots of dynamic and surprising conversations.

When you’re all paneled-out, head into the city or the mountains. The conference takes place in the heart of downtown Denver, where you can easily access the Denver Art Museum, The Museum of Contemporary Art, the Clyfford Still Museum, The History Colorado Center, the Tattered Cover Bookstore (a Denver institution), and (if you’re feeling sporty) the REI Flagship store (complete with climbing wall). If you have access to a car, head west to Golden, Boulder, or Estes Park—the entrance to Rocky Mountain National Park—for beautiful hikes and sights. Before leaving Denver, consider visiting the Museum of Contemporary Art, Denver (1485 Delgany Street) to check out their new exhibition on Conceptual Writing. The MCA is offering SSAWW registrants $1 admission to the museum on Saturday, October 13th. (Please be prepared to show conference nametag on admission.) The MCA is easily accessible either by foot or via the free 16th street shuttle. For museum hours and more information, visit: http://www.mcadenver.org/.

Whatever you do, remember to drink plenty of water! (Altitude sickness is pretty common in these parts.) Enjoy!

Special Thanks from the Conference Planning Team

Preparing for a conference with the scope of this one involves many people, and we on the core planning team have been especially lucky to have had much generous support. SSAWW members and Executive Board colleagues gave unstintingly of their time and expertise. We extend our warmest thanks to all who assisted with such crucial tasks as evaluating proposals, serving on award review committees, and staffing the on-site registration desk. We should highlight the particularly extensive efforts of these SSAWW officers:

- Treasurer Karen A. Weyler, whose patience with the many financial dimensions of conference management was astounding;
- Vice President for Development, Kristin Jacobson, who ably led the awards process from start to finish and who, all along the way, provided advice and direct action around our communications efforts;
- Vice President for Publications Donna Campbell who, like Kristin, was ever-responsive and, indeed, proactive in providing quick access to the SSAWW listserv, website, and conference website to support timely communications.

We also extend special thanks to these dedicated friends of the conference:

Graduate students Larisa Asaeli (TCU) and Sara Taylor Boissonneau (UNC-G), who gave far more productive hours to conference preparation than SSAWW could afford to compensate;

Kimberly Savage of the Denver Westin, who answered all our questions with good grace and expertise and who exhibited flexibility around every challenge, and Tom Weitzel of the Sheraton, Philadelphia, who advised our hotel selection process early on and continued to offer support for our planning;

Virginia Uzendoski of the University of Nebraska—Lincoln, who organized and maintained our conference registration website;

Former SSAWW President Karen Kilcup and previous Conference Director and VP for Organizational Matters Carolyn Sorisio, who offered countless pep talks and all-around mentoring, over our years of planning;

Colleagues at our home institutions, who often assisted our work—including sharing resources from other conferences they had helped lead and giving thoughtful general advice;

Our marvelous Local Arrangements Committee: Gillian Silverman, Tina Gianquitto, and Jennifer Armstrong;

Colleagues from c19 and the American Literature Association (especially Alfred Bendixen), who generously shared materials and suggestions for organizing conferences;

Graduate student volunteers, who helped staff the registration desk, served as “runners,” and contributed to our social media initiative throughout the conference;

Augusta Rorbach and her team of graduate student writers for ESQ, who worked as “reporters” throughout the conference and who will be preparing an account of its highlights for the journal;

Exhibitors who participated in the Book Exhibit during a time when budgets for academic publishing are shrinking, while publication remains crucial to our membership;

All who submitted session or paper proposals, answered calls linked to new initiatives like our Creative Conversations strand, served at the mentoring breakfast, or otherwise contributed to our program-building process;

Pattie Cowell and her colleagues Maricela DeMirjyn and Sasha Steensen, who organized our special sessions on/by creative women writers of today;

Everyone who joined us here in Denver for the conference!
